An old Chief and his grandson sat in the shade of an ancient tree, staring at the river below. The elder looked troubled. Softly, the boy asked, “What is the matter Grandfather?” The old man frowned. “It is as if there are two wolves fighting in my heart.” “Tell me about the wolves,” said the boy. “One is uncooperative, confrontational, aggressive. The other is peaceful, inquisitive, forgiving. Curious, the boy asked, “Which one is going to win?” “Ah, my boy,” his face lit up, “That’s easy! The one I feed.”
